Timeline: The Federal Reserve Responds to the Threat of Coronavirus

THOMAS WADE | JULY 28, 2020

Executive Summary

- On Sunday, March 15, the Federal Reserve embarked on a large-scale program employing emergency powers in order to stabilize a tumultuous economy under pressure from the novel coronavirus COVID-19.
- Chief among these emergency actions are cutting interest rates effectively to zero and a $700 billion round of quantitative easing.
- Despite these actions, stock prices on Monday took their steepest dive since 1987’s Black Monday, and it remains to be seen whether enough liquidity has been injected into the market to prevent the financial system from widespread failures.
