Today the American Action Forum (@AAF) released an analysis of the Food and Drug Administration’s (FDA) decision to forgo up to $585 million in regulatory savings by refraining from overturning the Obama Administration’s menu labeling guidance. The FDA stated they found the guidance strikes the appropriate balance between providing flexibility and complying with the Affordable Care Act. AAF analysis also found that many businesses had already begun implementing the rule so actual cost savings from revisiting the rule would likely have been minimal.

Click here to read the research