New Proposal: Building a Pro-Growth Legal Immigration System

ALLISON EDWARDS | MAY 28, 2019

The American Action Forum has released “Building a Pro-Growth Legal Immigration System,” a new proposal for reforming immigration to the United States. AAF’s President Douglas Holtz-Eakin and Director of Immigration and Trade Policy Jacqueline Varas designed the reform to shift the United States away from prioritizing non-economic immigration and toward focusing legal immigration on the demands of a productive labor force.

The proposed points-based system is designed to advance entrepreneurship, augment productivity gains, fill skills gaps, and combat demographically driven labor force declines by:

- Giving businesses access to the workers they need in the current environment of labor shortages and record-low unemployment rates;
- Ensuring a means for both higher- and lower-skilled individuals who want to contribute to the U.S. economy—and are qualified to do so—to come to the United States legally; and
- Continuing to honor family relationships, but requiring qualified applicants to possess characteristics ensuring they will be productive members of the labor force.
