

Insight

Education

FEBRUARY 21, 2010

Student achievement in the U.S. lags behind the rest of the industrialized nations. Within the U.S., predictable gaps in achievement based on wealth and ethnicity are poisonous and persistent features of our education systems. New solutions and innovative policies are needed to address this growing crisis. Pouring more money into the existing system and increasing the government's role has not been – and will not be – a successful solution. To learn more, please click here.