AAF Research Finds Small Businesses Are Disproportionately Impacted by Regulations

PATRICK HEFFLINGER | APRIL 13, 2017

Today the American Action Forum (@AAF) released new research examining how regulations affect small businesses. AAF research finds that the average small business is required to comply with more than 379 hours of paperwork annually which equates to ten full time work weeks. Furthermore, AAF research concludes that the regulatory costs of these regulatory burdens come out to more than $111 billion annually for small businesses.
