Press Release

Assessing Financial Support for Businesses During the Pandemic

ALLISON EDWARDS | SEPTEMBER 28, 2020

Six months after the national emergency declaration, businesses continue to face a range of financial pressures. In a new analysis, AAF's Director of Financial Services Policy Thomas Wade surveys three important ones: the Federal Reserve's slow rollout of the Main Street Lending Program, pressures on insurers to pay business-interruption claims, and business liability for coronavirus-related claims. All three present both the opportunity and the need for Congress to intervene, Wade notes.

The American Action Forum is hosting an online event on these issues tomorrow. Register for the event here.