Health Care Affordability Discussions Must Include DIR

PATRICK HEFFLINGER | OCTOBER 18, 2017

Today the American Action Forum released new research on prescription drug prices and their effect on Medicare Part D. AAF finds that direct and indirect remuneration, also known as post-point-of-sale discounts, play a large part in drug pricing for Medicare Part D patients. The research concludes that direct and indirect remuneration must continue to be part of the discussion as policymakers seek solutions to improve health care affordability.
